

The Well Groomed Woman

A Novel Way of Treating the All-Important Topic, Feminine Beauty.

BY KATHERINE MORTON.

HOW TO SECURE FULL VALUE FROM YOUR HAIR

NEVER in the history of Fashion's long despotic reign has the coiffure played the all-important role that it does today. Without the co-operation of becoming, well-groomed hairdressing, the best laid plans of Parisian modistes and milliners will go astray. The always trying princess model in gowns must be crowned by irreproachable tresses, and the sharp angle of the new hat at the back and its chic tilt in the front demand a coiffure in which every line is artistic. Unlike other periods of careful coiffuring, today's modes and customs require the wig and demand hair that is either all natural or combined so cleverly with real hair as to defy detection.

Fortunately the well-groomed woman is not obliged to obey hard and fast rules of hair-dressing, but has sufficient leeway to suit her coiffure to her face and thus minimize small facial defects. This is most fortunate, for a successful coiffure will lift ten years from a tired face, and throw the softening glamour of youth over sagging features. Every woman, therefore, should study her features first and styles in hair-dressing afterwards.

For instance, the popular low coiffure is the privilege of youth, and should be avoided by all women of mature years. Low styles of hair-dressing with drooping lines are all right for the girlish face or the full, round, wholesome face. They make the tired woman look old. Downward lines make for age, upturning lines for youthfulness. Incidentally the girl who adopts the coiffure on the nape of the neck must exercise exquisite care in shampooing her hair, otherwise her collars and shirt waist yokes will show the slight discoloration which betrays the need of shampooing.

For drowsy eyes, the Marcell gave is still in favor, and it does not injure the hair if care is taken to avoid singeing or scorching. The woman who has plenty of time to give to her toilet will accomplish excellent results in Marcelling by using bandolin instead of iron. Wet the hair with the following lotion, and comb and brush it into the desired waves:

Gum of arabic 1 ounce
Good moist sugar 1/2 ounce
Pure hot water 1/2 pint
Dissolve, and when cold add:
Alcohol 2 fluid ounces
Bichloride of mercury and Sal
ammoniac, each 6 grains

The last two should be dissolved in the alcohol before admixture. Lastly add enough water to make the whole measure one pint. Perfume with cologne or lavender water.

When thoroughly dry run the comb lightly through it and you will have exactly the same effect as that of the iron.

There is always one way of parting the hair that is becoming to a woman, and she must experiment until she finds the right place. The woman with the long, thin face should never part her hair in the middle, as, particularly if she has a long nose, the effect is bad. Let her part it on either side, and if she has some slight facial defect on the right side, part the hair on the left, and vice versa.

The narrow-faced woman should fluff out her hair on either side and for this reason, the pompadour without the rat remains in favor, and it should be parted to suit the features. The severe pompadour is another privilege of youth or the dowager with pure white hair, delicate pink cheeks and the carriage of a grande dame. For the woman of middle age if the hair is not parted and the forehead is high, the Alexandria fringe or short, softly curled bang is worn directly under the pompadour in front.

If the ears are large or stick out from the head, dress the hair well down over the ears in soft, wavy fluffed effects. Cleo de Merode, the noted French beauty, is an example of what hair-dressing accomplishes for the homely woman. No one considered her a beauty because her ears were large and stuck out far from her head. An artist who desired to copy her beautiful profile for a picture, conceived the idea of hiding the ugly ear entirely by perfectly dressed hair, and directly the ugly duckling became one of the most famous beauties of all Europe.

The woman whose head is flat in the back should be most particular to fluff her back hair until it swells out gracefully, like the pompadour over her forehead, and then wear a hat with snug, elaborate trimming under the back. This will gracefully hide the fact that her flat head indicates a lack of maternal affection and love of home.

The girl with the reticent or "pud" nose must curl her hair and dress it lightly, but not too high on the top of her head. A witty hair dresser described a girl who drew back her hair tightly and knotted it severely on top of her head as a "person with a small pug on her nose and a large pug on her head."

The girl whose eyes are set close together should part her hair in the middle. The girl with the high forehead who does not like the Alexandria fringe or bang, should wear a soft pompadour without a rat, and a Delta Fox or single small curl fastened with a hairpin in the middle of her pompadour. This is almost essential if her nose is large.

Coronet effects are such in vogue and these require a soft braid encircling the hair just back of the forehead. Such style of hair dressing is a boon to the woman with little hair as she can save her combings or buy a ready-made switch to form the crown of braids.

Hair ornaments this season are extremely light and airy. For young women they come in the form of my rose wreaths, gauze wings set off by paillettes, and very fine French flowers in delicate colors sewn on black velvet bows. The gauze flowers are also showered with diamond dewdrops and for the dowager there is nothing handsomer than maribout tips with the same dewdrops.

So long as the present millinery remains in vogue the coiffure must give the effect of luxuriant locks, and if these are lacking, a woman must seek help from the professional hair dresser and hair maker. In the meantime she should look to the cause of her falling or falling locks.

The bad condition of the scalp may be traced to various causes—anaemia, indigestion, chronic headaches or worry. Having removed the cause, apply remedial measures. If the head is scalp-bound, that is the scalp glued to the skull, have the head massaged. This will also relieve that most common ailment, excess of oil in the hair. Do not buy tonics indiscriminately. The tonic that will relieve dryness may not be the one you buy because you like the label.

For dry hair, try this formula, which can be made up by your own druggist:
Glycerine 1 ounce
Eau de cologne 1/2 pint
Liquid ammoniac 1/4 pint
Oil of origanum and oil of rosemary, each 1/2 dram

Tincture of cantharides 1 ounce
Briskly agitate for ten minutes, then add:
Camphor sulph 1/2 pint
and again mix well and stir. Add a few drops of essence of musk, or other perfume.

For oily hair use this lotion:
Powdered bicarbonate of soda 1 ounce
Powdered borate of soda, each 1/2 ounce
Eau de cologne 1 fluid ounce
Alcohol 2 fluid ounces
Tincture of cochineal 1/2 fluid ounce
Distilled water 16 ounces

Mix and shake until the solution is complete.

For dandruff, use this:
Yolk of one egg
One pint of rain water (hot.)
One ounce of rosemary spirits.
Beat the mixture thoroughly, use it warm, rubbing thoroughly into the scalp. Rinse in several waters.

Do not wash your hair according to the same rule employed by the girl next door who has luxurious tresses. If your hair is very dry, a fortnightly shampoo is sufficient. If it is oily the shampoo must be given every ten days or once a week.

Naturally beautiful hair is glossy, but not greasy. This effect may be heightened by brushing it, but not poulticing it, with a wet brush, and the best implement is the rubber brush with metallic bristles, set far apart. The same results may be secured by striking the hair regularly in a downward motion, with the hands which have been moistened with a few drops of brilliantine, made by the following formula:

Castor oil 4 fluid drams
Sweet almond oil 1/2 fluid drams

Glycerine 1/2 fluid drams
Jockey club extract 3 fluid drams
Alcohol enough to make eight ounces in all.

Ventilation is as important for the hair as for the lungs. It should be lifted from the scalp and shaken lightly every night before retiring, then braided lightly and loosely. If oily and matted, and it is not yet time for the egg shampoo, sprinkle the hair with powdered orris root, allow it to remain on for an hour or more, then brush it out lightly. This is the best of all dry shampoos. For blonde hair, add some powdered saffron to the orris root.

Change the style of dressing your hair occasionally to relieve the pressure on the scalp, and, above all things, never do up your hair after the egg shampoo until it is thoroughly dry and smells exquisitely dainty.
